

california lutheran college adventure is the inside breaking its walls to grow out, the plant pushing up and the flowering into foreign air, the fruit bursting its rind to sample decay.

it is the one refusing the measure of the many,
a child stretching to grow above a tree, though his father reaches only the lowest branch.

candles consumed
for a brighter flame, water boiling to steam.

growing outward is challenging the world, the runner demanding if hills be stronger than muscle, roots unwilling to recognize stone.

roots cracking stone,

roots broken and blunted,
digging in stone.

mind looking beyond the axiom is adventure, building its bridges from "given" to "perhaps"

but allowing only the given for arches.

draw light upon darkness and call the patterns love.

learning that concave fits into convex is discovery, and that white is nothing without black.

the student of anatomy
meets the student of politics, the violinist plays at last in the orchestra.

discovery is sometimes looking only at the one, finding the many colors in black and the many petals in a single bud.

the self alone with itself discovers, then opens the door to something new.

the street from house to city always changes —

old men going away,
and one thinks the street empty until one sees the young women.

go into the house again, the atmosphere of the outside leaves its trace on furniture that stays from day to year.

and furniture grows richer with its age, from holding many vases of roses from the garden.

but climbing stair after stair to look upon the city from the roof finally takes away the strength of legs, a runner breaks his lungs against the course, roses that open widest fall the first.

but bridges may be built to nowhere if the drafter would conceive the highest arch.

the wanderer follows his vision until his wandering becomes the vision, the asking becomes an answer.

the street from house to city always changes,
children running
past old men going away.
and later the street empty,
and then young women

the superb seniors, (found on page 16) studying under the fantastic faculty (they, too, on page 16) at california lutheran college, have adventurously questioned the leadership of the "wonderful" administration (please turn to page 48). surviving a grueling four years of a myriad activities (see page 50), they have emerged from the lower classes (to be inspected from page 100 following) playing and cheering like good sports (starting on page 124)

in spite of the ordeal.

p.s. one may find several hundred names listed on and succeeding from page 173
